Tri-Adopting It's A Way Of Life!

Foster Application and Agreement

Thank you for choosing to foster one of our pets!

Fostering at times will require patience and TLC but it can be one of the most rewarding things you will ever do. It not only gives these pets the time they need to be adoption ready, it also helps us learn more about them so that we can better match them to their fur-ever homes. It helps prepare animals for adoption by giving them a chance to live in a home where they can fully express their personality, work to overcome fears, or recover from trauma.

Some animals aren't accustomed to life in a home, whether they had previously lived as a stray, or were kept as an outside only pet. They likely don't understand the concept of stairs and navigating around furniture or might be frightened by unfamiliar sounds like vacuums and kitchen appliances. Even knowing how to use a litter box or alerting their humans that they need to go to the bathroom can pose a challenge for them.

By living in a home with a family, pets are able to learn something new every day while getting one on one attention from their foster family. New experiences and unfamiliar sounds can be terrifying for an animal not used to them, but by having someone by their side to show them these things aren't too scary, they get a bit braver each day.

Even when shelters make every effort possible to keep animals comfortable and happy, the environment can still be scary and overwhelming for some, causing them to "shut down" emotionally or display destructive behaviors due to stress. When this happens, the animals can sometimes isolate themselves or begin to display negative behaviors, resulting in them being passed up by potential adopters.

Foster homes are also essential for special needs pets or those who are recovering from an injury or surgical procedure. When animals are in a foster program, they're able to enjoy a more relaxing environment while getting the one on one attention they need. This can be especially helpful for very shy and fearful animals, or those who need a bit of extra help with socialization. They build confidence by learning how to trust people, how to play with toys and other animals, and by experiencing everyday activities. Foster homes can also help by using positive reinforcement training to teach basic obedience skills and tricks. Each and every one of these things plays an individual, yet critical role in helping animals find adoptive homes. Animals who were terrified in shelters often open up once they're in the comfort of a home, helping them become happy, more well-adjusted animals.

Some say they could never foster a pet because it would be too hard to say goodbye when the pet is adopted. It may be hard to say goodbye to the animal you've bonded with, but it's important to remember that by opening your home, you are saving a life-- and each pet you foster is a new life saved. You become an important part of the mission to save homeless pets by not only giving that individual animal hope, but by making a difference for all animals.
